Light show: A lantern made by St Mary's Primary School grade 6 students at a Melbourne camp last week will feature in a Federation Square exhibition next month. To celebrate Education Week, the students took part in a special workshop with Melbourne artist Anu Patel to produce their own lantern, which will be displayed at Federation Square during its free winter program, The Light in Winter. The lantern will form the centrepiece of the Solstice Celebration on June 18 — a 'night of a thousand lights' where communities from around Victoria will converge on the square to celebrate the winter solstice. Following the celebration, the lanterns will be rigged from a communal art installation called Light Hearts, produced by former U2 lighting designer, Bruce Ramus.
